NZ Ambassador to Washington Mike Moore retiring from role in December

Below are extracts from Mike Moore's note to All Staff and Agencies Washington DC; US Posts and Hon Cons

"Yvonne and I are giving notice to MFAT that we will be leaving the Post just before Christmas on the 16th December.

Minister Murray McCully and MFAT have been very generous and kind to us.

Yvonne and I have made a lot of very special and lasting good friends here and their support and compassion has been wonderful.

I am now the longest serving continuous Ambassador to the US. I didn’t seek this job but felt I should do it because great issues were at stake. The time was ripe for it.

On a security level things have moved up several notches. You are aware of the many exercises we do together and the important contribution we are making in the struggle against ISIS. TPP was the second part of the job and we have worked to getting acceptance for this by Congress. I believe it will be forthcoming. It will be a question of time.

We will go home content that we did our best. Pity the old body gave up".

The AmCham board has written to Mike Moore to congratulate him on his achievements during his time in Washington and for all his support of AmCham.

Tim Groser appointed New Zealand's Ambassador to Washington

Prime Minister and Acting Foreign Minister John Key has announced Tim Groser as New Zealand’s next Ambassador to the United States taking up the appointment in early 2016.

“New Zealand’s relationship with the United States is one of our most crucial,” Mr Key says.

“As the world’s largest economy and New Zealand’s fourth-largest trading partner, the United States is a key destination for our exporters. New Zealand and the United States also cooperate on a range of international peace and security issues.

“Tim’s extensive international experience as Trade Minister makes him well-placed for this role, particularly as the Trans-Pacific Partnership progresses towards implementation.”

Mr Key thanked outgoing Ambassador Mike Moore for his contribution and service to New Zealand in Washington.

“I want to thank Mike for the role he has played as Ambassador since 2010. New Zealand’s relationship with the United States has been strengthening over a number of years and Mike has been a key contributor to that improvement. “I wish him and his wife Yvonne all the best as they return home to New Zealand.”

TPP update

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade held initial information sessions on TPP in early November 2015. New Zealand’s Chief Negotiator for TPP, Dr David Walker (Deputy Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade) gave an [overview presentation] on TPP’s key outcomes for New Zealand at sessions in Auckland, Dunedin and Wellington.

These initial information sessions will be followed by further outreach events, including roadshows following signature. See also the New Zealand Government factsheets on this website for more information on key outcomes for New Zealand.

It has been suggested in the media that TPP could be signed by the participating Trade Ministers in New Zealand in February. The deal cannot be signed before 3 February which is the end of the US Congress 90-day review period of the deal. The Foreign Affairs, Defence and Trade Select Committee will start public hearings as soon as the deal is signed.

Inside US Trade advises U.S. business associations with cross-sectoral membership such as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers (NAM) are still consulting with members about their views on the final text of the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) agreement, but private-sector sources said they expect these groups to take formal positions on the deal early this month.

The Office of the U.S. Trade Representative recently released reports on the Trans-Pacific Partnership submitted by 27 U.S. trade advisory committees, as required under the fast-track law. Although USTR is touting the reports as generally supportive of the TPP deal, they also include statements critical of the agreement from certain stakeholders such as the brand-name pharmaceutical industry, financial services companies, labor unions, and state and local officials. Additionally, the report by the Advisory Committee on Trade Policy and Negotiations contains a dissent signed by the three union leaders who serve on the committee.

U.S. Trade Representative Michael Froman has been busy trying to gin up support for the Trans-Pacific Partnership on Capitol Hill. Meeting with House Ways and Means Democrats and Republicans. However Rep. Gerry Connolly (D-VA), a vice chairman of New Democrat Coalition, that he believes Congress is unlikely to vote on a bill to implement the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) until the lame-duck session in late 2016 because the U.S. International Trade Commission (ITC) is not expecting to release its economic analysis of the trade pact until mid-May and lawmakers face congressional primaries from March through September.

The Obama administration has begun to reach out to Senate Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-UT) regarding his objections to the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) agreement on pharmaceutical intellectual property (IP) and other issues, and potentially his demands for remedying them.

AmCham's in the Asia Pacific region are holding regular conference calls with the US Chamber for updated briefings on the state of play in the USA. APCAC are still planning on staging their annual Washington Doorknock in late June in anticipation that TPP could be in front of Congress at that time.

US Naval Ships invited to visit NZ

New Zealand's long deadlock over American naval ship visits could soon end, with the first formal invitation extended to the United States since anti-nuclear legislation was introduced in 1987. The invitation is to attend the Royal New Zealand Navy's 75th anniversary commemorations in November next year. Prime Minister John Key said the government had invited a range of countries to visit - including China and the US - and it is up to those governments to decide whether they would attend. New visa to grow more value from international students

Tertiary Education, Skills and Employment Minister Steven Joyce and Immigration Minister Michael Woodhouse have announced a new student visa designed to make New Zealand more competitive for retaining and attracting top international students.

The Pathway Student Visa will allow international students to undertake a pathway of up to three consecutive programmes of study with selected education providers. A pathway can be offered by a single education provider or in partnership with other selected education providers. They will be valid for a maximum of five years.

Mr Joyce says the Pathway Student Visas will be implemented from 7 December for an initial pilot period of 18 months and cover more than 500 primary, secondary and tertiary institutions.

Figures released earlier this month showed the number of international students studying in New Zealand on a student visa went up by 16 per cent in the 2014/15 financial year to 84,856. Read more.

Large-Scale International Military Exercise

Around 200 battle-ready troops and 280 tonnes of equipment and vehicles embarked in HMNZS CANTERBURY in Wellington in the first stage of the largest amphibious exercise conducted by the New Zealand Defence Force (NZDF).

“Exercise Southern Katipo 2013 aims to test the capability of the NZDF to mount a medium-scale amphibious operation that involves maritime, land and air assets,” said Royal New Zealand Captain Jim Gilmour, Commander Amphibious Task Force for the exercise.

“It will also enable us to demonstrate our ability to operate effectively with our coalition partners,” he added.

The NZDF will be deploying two ships (HMNZS CANTERBURY and HMNZS WELLINGTON) and up to 12 aircraft for the exercise, which involves up to 2200 personnel from New Zealand and nine other nations. The exercise will be held from 4-29 November, with the primary area of operations centred on the airport and port of Timaru. Read more.

AmCham China are putting together a great program with the aim of bringing together over 300 business, policy, diplomatic, government, and media leaders for two days of important and incisive discussion on China’s Asia Pacific engagement and its implications for American business.

Challenges and opportunities affecting US business in East Asia, the future of Asia as a financial hub, China's regional engagement and One Belt, One Road initiative, and the regional trading environment are just some of the important themes and issues that will be examined on April 14. April 15 will be a deep-dive into more China-specific issues including leveraging central versus local government relations, China's economic outlook and the 13th Five-Year Plan, and China’s economic slowdown.

The launch of AmCham China's 18th Annual White Paper on American Business, a 'Meet your Embassy' reception, and a gala dinner to celebrate AmCham China's 25th anniversary are just some of the exciting special events planned during the conference.

NZ takes Texas by storm
In the biggest sales mission to be undertaken in the US in over a decade, Tourism New Zealand and 25 New Zealand operators have taken destination New Zealand to Texas, the ‘Lone Star State’, with outstanding results. The activity was organised as part of TNZ’s work to support Air New Zealand’s new Houston to Auckland route which launches 15 December. Read more.

Visit USA Expos 2016
Planning for the Visit USA Expos 2016 is well underway and the events are shaping up to be the biggest yet. The Expos will take place from 15 - 19 February 2016 in Sydney, Melbourne and Brisbane, and 22 - 23 February 2016 in Auckland and Christchurch.

Brand USA Director for Australia and New Zealand commented on the strong turnout, explaining "never before have we seen so many US suppliers register their attendance at the Australian and New Zealand expos, which is an indication of the strength and importance of these markets to our USA destination partners. We now expect to welcome 47 US suppliers to this market in February."
Airlines

2016 will see three US-based airlines operating to Auckland – existing operator Hawaiian Airlines Auckland to Honolulu service will be joined by United Airlines Auckland to San Francisco and American Airlines Auckland to Los Angeles. United, in conjunction with Air New Zealand and American in conjunction with Qantas commence services mid-year.

Abu Dhabi based Etihad has just been announced as the Air Transport World Airline of the Year. Previous recipients of the ATW Airline of the Year award include Southwest Airlines (2015); Delta Air Lines (2014); ANA (2013); Air New Zealand (2012); and Emirates (2011). The only two airline ratings awards worth paying attention to are this ATW one and the SkyTrax awards. The Etihad award is well deserved – our own team members at BWT have enjoyed their service and comfort levels on board and together with their commercial people who we deal with around the world make this award well justified.

Clients who pay for their Air New Zealand flights using their Air NZ Travelcard and also are on the airline’s Above & Beyond reward programme will no longer receive single entry Lounge Passes as part of the soft rewards programme. Frequent travellers will note the congestion in many of the airlines’ lounges and this measure will free up a few seats. Lounge access can still be gained by paying a Business Class fare, purchasing a Koru Club annual membership or gaining Gold Status on any Star Alliance frequent flyer programme.

New Zealand introduces a Border Clearance Levy for sales and travel from 01 January 2016. The tax will apply to all international passengers departing and arriving into New Zealand and will be collected as a ticketable airline tax by way of air travel agents. The tax is applicable for all international departures and arrivals into New Zealand.

International Departures: NZD 3.37 (including GST) International Arrivals: NZD 18.20 (including GST)

On the subject of travel to Australia, fingerprint and face scans are a part of an update to procedures confirmed by the Australian Department of Immigration and Border Protection. The changes mean that many non-New Zealand passport holders applying for an Australian visa will no longer use the simple on line process, instead requiring them to present at a facility to provide the biometric information. This applies to many ‘third-country’ nationals applying for entry in Australia from New Zealand. If your company employs non-New Zealand passport holders far greater advance notice for an Australian business trip will now be required.

The Future of U.S. tax reform

By Gina Wallace, Director, NZ US Tax Specialists Ltd

‘No-one can tell you what will happen in the future. But some people can really give you vision about what might happen’ (David Lifson, CPA introducing former House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Mr Dave Camp at the 2015 AICPA National Tax Conference).

Mr Camp delivered an enlightening and insightful speech on the future of U.S. tax reform at the November National Tax Conference in Washington DC. The speech focused on the key drivers for U.S. tax reform underpinning the Tax Reform Act of 2014.

He said that there are three key drivers for tax reform, being the tax extenders, the economy, and international pressure.

‘We are the only nation in the world that lets a huge chunk of its tax code expire, often for a year, and then retroactively puts in back in place’.

‘That whole process is really unacceptable to me, and it puts us out of place with the rest of the world’ he told conference delegates.

‘If something has been extended for 40 years, or 30 years, or 15 years, I think it’s pretty much policy’.

Moves to make tax extenders permanent, he said, especially the obvious ones, have received bipartisan support but have been rejected by the White House.

Commenting that the economy is not where it needs to be, Mr Camp observed that the unemployment figures are understated and are more likely to be around 10 percent.

This is due to a large extent, to people having left the workforce, and Mr Camp expressed his personal concerns around growing the economy, keeping jobs in the United States, the issue of ‘substantive presence’ becoming increasingly significant, and the difficulties that school-leavers face in finding employment.

On the international front Mr Camp talked extensively about the pressure that the United States is experiencing from overseas due to having the highest statutory corporate rate in the world and the second highest effective statutory rate – second only to France.

This is severely affecting the United States’ ability to compete on the global stage.

The United States is one of only a few countries left with a worldwide system of taxation both corporate and individual. Most other countries, including New Zealand, have moved to a system of territorial basis for taxation of incorporated entities.

Accordingly the phenomena of ‘lock up’ has some 2.3 trillion U.S. dollars stranded overseas, whereby corporations reinvest profits rather than repatriate these to the United States.

As the United States has the highest corporate statutory rate in the world, lock-up occurs to avoid additional tax payable in the United States due to foreign tax rates not being sufficient to meet the U.S. tax liability on repatriated profits.

The OECD average statutory corporate income tax rate is now around 24%, a steady and dramatic decline from 50% in the 1980s, and Mr Camp stated that there is unanimity that the U.S. corporate rate needs to come down, citing that the United States is a ‘takeover target’ due to its lack of global competitiveness. LEGAL ISSUES

THE TEXAS LEGAL BRIEF

We have previously written about our belief that Texas is a prime location for a New Zealand business to set up its subsidiary or just to do business in general. We thought that as December is the inaugural Auckland to Houston flight on Air New Zealand, we would provide you with a quick legal brief on Texas government and the Texas legal system.

Texas joined the United States in 1845 following approximately 10 years as an independent nation after declaring its independence from the Republic of Mexico in 1836 and defeating the Mexican dictator Antonio Santa Anna in a series of well commemorated battles (Remember the Alamo!).

Under the US federal system, each annexed state operates as a semi-autonomous area with limited federal oversight under the US Constitution. While all federal law is supreme to state law, pursuant to the US Constitution’s 10th Amendment of its original Bill of Rights, the powers not specifically enumerated to the federal government in the US Constitution are left to the states. Thus, each state has broad powers to regulate the health, safety, and welfare of its citizens.

The Texas government is a close reflection of the US federal government. It was established by the Texas Constitution which was first adopted in 1827 (there are 7 different versions), with the current version having been adopted in 1876. The 1876 Constitution has a whopping 483 amendments and establishes a government with an executive branch (headed by the Texas Governor), a legislative branch (the bi-cameral Congress of Texas with a House of Representatives and a Senate), and a judicial branch.

The State of Texas has over 100 government agencies which regulate everything from finance and the environment to cemeteries and horse-racing. While this may sound daunting, the Texas government has created a very simplistic regulatory system, which is ranked among the top 5 in the nation as to ease of compliance and the low quantity of regulations overall. So, when looking to what specific regulations may apply to your business in the State of Texas, you would look for the regulatory body on the state level, as opposed to the federal level, and you would consult the Texas Administrative Code (which can be found online) or the specific agency’s website.

The state is divided into 254 counties, each governed by an elected five-member Commissioner’s Court, which is housed in the County Courthouse. The Commissioner’s Court is headed by the elected county judge, who has both executive and judicial duties. In Texas, the counties have limited control and mostly deal with areas such as road construction, utility provision outside of municipal areas, and control of the counties’ sheriff’s departments. The largest counties in Texas are Harris County (which encompasses the Houston metropolitan area), followed by Dallas County. Outside of a very limited industrial sectors, you will not need to apply to the County government for a business license.

The real power for local governance lies with the municipal governments. Each municipality is governed by a city council which is under the direction of the mayor’s office. The cities have broad powers and can enact local ordinances which effect where businesses can be located, set local sales and property tax, and regulate various health and safety issues. The largest city governments in the State of Texas are the City of Houston, followed by the City of Dallas. Generally, when setting up a business, you may need to be in contact with the city’s zoning department to obtain occupancy permits for any new office build-outs. However, Texas municipal law rarely requires a business to obtain a license to operate. So the local government regulatory burden is very very light.

The judicial branch has 5 court levels (municipal, county, district, court of appeals, and the supreme court). Interestingly, the judges in Texas are elected, which means you can tell a lot about the way they will rule in a case by the party of which they are a member. For the most part, the current government (state, county, and local) and most judges in the State of Texas are members of the Republican Party. While this may be a bit conservative for Kiwi tastes, it does lend itself to a very business friendly atmosphere which is focused on tort reform and ease of business. This has made Texas one of the most low-cost jurisdictions in the United States, with a very business friendly regulatory environment.

As a result of this, Texas law has been shaped over the past 20 years to protect businesses from frivolous lawsuits. Texas is ranked first in the United States in legislation limiting monetary losses that can be asserted against businesses in a tort lawsuit, and has created a loser pays procedure for many lawsuits which greatly limits the amount of potential litigation your business could face. Because of this system, insurance rates are generally lower in Texas than in other states, leaving your business with more money to invest on operations and employees (creating more profits for you to bring home). In short, it’s easy to do business in Texas.

It is important to analyze the regulatory, tax, and legal burdens of the state in which you are thinking of locating your subsidiary or otherwise setting up your distribution hub. Texas has ranked number 1 in the US for the past 10 years for a few very simple reasons: its laws are business friendly, its courts and legal system are fair to businesses, its cost of living and doing business are low, and its taxes are low. We encourage you to take advantage of the new Air New Zealand leg to Houston and go explore the amazing opportunities that await you in Texas.
